London Homecoming (The Rulefords Book 3) By Emma Carr

He's not capable of love...but she just might prove him wrong.

He's sexy, easy-going, and did we forget to mention wealthy? Every woman loves Blake Ruleford. Every woman except Sophie Hollingberry, that is.

Sophie's a neat-freak veterinarian with a penchant for saving ugly cats and sitting home alone every weekend night, despite the two stone she recently lost. Blake is her opposite in every way. A party boy who travels the globe to find the next adrenaline laced adventure, Blake dates supermodels and gets photographed by the tabloids. Sophie can't stand him. Okay, that's a lie. She can't stand the attraction she feels for the shallow playboy.

Blake's been forced home to run the family bank while his father recovers from stroke. He needs to tighten up his image if he wants to keep their clients from panicking, so he proposes a fake engagement with his sister's best friend, Sophie. She's perfect for the ruse...smart, respectable, and she'd never in a million years fall for him.

But assumptions always have a way of biting you in the...well, you know. There just might be more to Blake than meets the eye. And Sophie might actually like the man she discovers underneath the party boy image.

Now, if only Blake were capable of love...
